- F6 Ross Sylvester Glick b 7 Nov 1905, farmer, Tower Hill, Ill. This story about Ross as I remember it and from a paper clipping at the time.

After lunch Saturday March 21, 1908, when Ross Glick was less than two and one half yrs he started to follow his father Charles Glick to Tower Hill four miles north. At the turn in the road apparently Ross went in the opposite direction on a less travelled road, then continued through the woods and underbrush.

My family also went to Tower Hill for a family picture, which was made and we hurried home when we heard Ross was missing. My father didn't change his good clothes but jumped on a horse for the all night search with neighbors. By morning they decided to drag Simmons' big pond and ordered blood hounds from Decatur fifty miles north.

By 9:00 a.m. Sunday morning Civil War veteran George Payne, an uncle of Mrs. Orlando Glick, found Ross tangled in his wire hog pen across from New Hope Church.

Payne hadn't heard of Ross being lost so carried him west to neighbor Sparr's who had children.

George Payne carried Ross through the woods nearly a mile when Ross exclaimed "Papa's Barn" but he was unable to tell a thing about his adventure. He only remembers there were lots of people around and he had eggs for breakfast. His clothes were torn and muddy and evidence he had spent time in the hog pen with the warmth of the hogs as it was a cold night though he suffered no ill effects.

Very few people had telephones in that area though Ross' parents and grandparents Isaac and Juliann had phones which I remember were often used that night.
